

How to use these token cutouts

These pages contain the text The Cat in the Hat by Dr Seuss (1832 tokens, entropy 2.76 bits/token, perplexity 6.8). Each cutout shows a token preceded by its prefix—the 1 token that came before it in the original text. Every token has its own colour: prefix tokens appear inside a matching coloured box, and the free-standing token is rendered in that same colour.

Setup

Cut out the tokens along the dotted lines and spread them out face-up on the table, with no overlap if possible. (This is the “training” step—every prefix-token combination from your training text is now a physical cutout on the table.)

Generation: a matching game

Find a cutout whose prefix matches the token you just wrote, write its token, and repeat—like a chain of dominoes:

the sun → sun did → did not

each cutout’s token reappears as the next cutout’s rightmost prefix box—that’s the chain

Each token has its own colour, so a quick colour-scan points you at candidates fast—but always verify the actual token matches, because colours sometimes repeat across different tokens.

1. start your text by copying any cutout’s prefix onto your page
2. find candidates—scan the spread for cutouts whose prefix matches the last 1 token you wrote
3. pick one visually—the more cutouts there are with that prefix, the more often your eye will land on them (that’s weighted sampling for free)
4. write down the cutout’s token, then put the cutout back in the spread (removing it would change the model’s distribution next time)
5. repeat from step 2
6. stop whenever you’ve written enough text—write as much or as little as you like
