

Search sheets: how to run the activity

The pages after this one are 36 search sheets, dealt from The Cat in the Hat by Dr Seuss. Print them one-sided and hand out one sheet per person; every sheet is different, and nothing needs cutting out. Each holds 54–55 token pairs: a next token with the previous token that came before it in the text.

Match the room to the sheets, not the other way round. More people than sheets: print the whole set again, once per extra roomful. Every count multiplies equally, so the proportions — which is all the model is — hold. Fewer: hand the spares out anyway, two or three to a person. A sheet nobody holds is a hole in the model.

In in the, the boxed token is the context and the is the next token. A token keeps its colour wherever it appears, so say the colour as you call one out — “who has the? it’s a purple one” — and the room can scan by colour before reading. With 8 colours and far more tokens, a colour narrows the search rather than settling it.

black grey red brown green blue purple magenta

Running a round

Seed the board: someone reads out any token pair from their sheet, boxed token first, and both go up — the room supplies the beginning too. Then, each round:

1. Call out the last token on the board.
2. Hands up from everyone holding a matching token pair — one hand each.
3. Pick a raised hand at random — whoever shouts first is the fastest reader, not a sample of the text — and ask for its next token.
4. The scribe writes that token up. It is part of the next context. Repeat.

What to watch for

The hands are the probability distribution. Every token pair sits with exactly one person, so a common continuation puts more hands in the air than a rare one. Nobody has to explain weighted sampling; the room performs it.

Nobody holds the model. No single sheet can continue the text on its own. One hand is not a stall — but no hands at all means an empty seat, so reseed from any token pair and say why.

1962 tokens, 240 unique · 2.83 bits/token · perplexity 7.1 · branching factor 4.32

Worked example

Start anywhere. Someone reads out a token pair — say this one — and both its tokens go on the board.

Round 1. Call out the — the last token on the board. A sheet across the room matches it, and that person reads out milk.

Round 2. Call out milk — the last token on the board. A sheet across the room matches it, and that person reads out on.

Keep going for as long as you like. What the room writes will sound like The Cat in the Hat without ever repeating it — that is the model generating, not the corpus being read out.
